COUNCIL APPROVES PAY FOR FIREMEN

An ordinance providing compensation for the members of the Daly City Volunteer Fire Department was approved by the City Council at the meeting last Monday evening.

Mayor Smith reported a meeting with several officials of the Civil Works Administration, from which good results are expected on the application for projects previously filed with the Civil Works Administration.

To assure quick action in turning in fire alarms, Councilman Selmi reported a meeting with officials of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, regrading the placing of red reflectors on street lights where fire boxes are located.

Councilman Sundermann reported progress and encouragement on the city request for American Railway Express service in Daly City, and stated that in the near future that company expects to have a house to house delivery in Daly City and Colma. This will mean a greater convenience for the residents of this section. Packages previously were received only at the Southern Pacific depot in Colma.

MACAULEY QUITS AS HEAD OF C. W. A.

Captain Edward Macauley, of Hillsborough, state C. W. A. director, has tendered his resignation to take effect today, with the closing of the Civil Works Administration program. His reason for resigning is to take a needed rest, said Captain Macauley's letter submitted to Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief administraton at Washington.

Captain Macauley has been head of the C. W. A. since December 15 last, and former chairman of the San Mateo county emergency relief committee. He recommended that his place be taken by Ralph G. Wadsworth, supervising engineer of the C. W. A. The civil works program will be reorganized to become the state emengency relief administration, largely under the direction of the present C. W. A. officials.

Captain Macauley said he would be glad to remain on duty until all affairs of the C. W. A. are wound up in California. His letter to Hopkins reads:

"I feel I have done as much as I should to aid in the fight to alleviate want among the unemployed, and I desire to retire to private life. The work has been hard and I feel the need of a rest."

LEGION AUXILIARY BIRTHDAY PARTY

Daly City Unit No. 410, American Legion Auxiliary, celebrated its third anniversary on Wednesday evening of last week. It was a gay affair. All the members came dressed in the most varid costumes. There was entertainment and lots of eats. Everyone enjoyed themselves and voted the party a huge success.

The Poppy poster drawn by George Shinazy, of the Jefferson school, won a high place in the Eighth District contest, and was forwarded to the Department. He is being duly rewarded by the Unit. Our Unit has ordered its poppies for the annual Poppy Day, May 26 to 30.

In carrying out the program as outlined by the National President, the month of March has been dedicated to community service. One of the services to be rendered is a donation to the public library. This Unit has donated some books to the Daly City library, as its part in this work.

A large delegation attended the San Mateo County Council whist and dance held in Redwood City last Saturday night.

The regular meeting will be held next Wednesday evening, April 4, at 8:30. Everyone be sure to attend.

The members will meet at the home of Margaret Miller on Monday afternoon, April 2, to sew for the Veterans in Livermore. A large supply of clothing has been made and donated for our adopted family.

Several members attended the whist and luncheon last Thursday, held at the home of Mrs. Lucy Prestige, in Bayshore, for the rehabilitation benefit.

Jefferson High P. T. A. Has Interesting Meeting

About seventy parents, teachers, and students gathered in the Little Theatre of the high school for the March meeting of the Parent-Teacher unit. A most excellent program, the sixth of a series interpreting the work of the school to the parents, was presented by students of the Spanish classes and the department of auto machanics.

The facility with which the students conversed in the little Spanish skit was a delight to the parents.

Mr. Hackley's presentation of the Smith Hughes work was both interesting and instructive, as was the shop demonstration by students which followed.

Perhaps the greatest hit of the evening was the humorous pantomime of the old-time "flivvers" given by the shop students. Other fine features of the program were the Spanish musical numbers, a talk on Spain and Spanish America, and last, but by no means least, the Hill Billies.

After the business meeting and program, the meeting adjourned to the cafeteria for home-made cake and coffee. Here a special table had been arranged for the twenty-five members whose names have been added to the roll this year.

Mr. Ferguson addressed the members on some of the problems that confront parents and teachers in trying to help our 'teen age boys and girls. He pointed out the value of the parent-teachers' meeting as a place where a better understanding of these problems might be gained by the thoughtful parent.

The records of the unit show a 56 per cent gain in membership, a total adult attendance of about 500 at the programs this year in which 150 students have taken part.

SURPRISE STORK SHOWER

The members of the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Veterans of Foreign Wars of Old Glory Post gave a surprise stork shower to Mrs. Austin Erwin, of Santa Cruz avenue, last Friday evening, in the Masonic Hall, after the regular meeting. The table was decorated in pastel shades. The center-piece was a blue crepe paper baby carriage, filled to overflowing with lovely gifts for the little newcomer. Delicious refreshments were served by the committee in charge. Those who attended were Mesdames Collins, Lewis, Brulez, Nordgren, Frazier, Beskett, Crowley, Gaiter, Bedford, Briggs, Hazelhurst, Dorn, Erratt, Wade, Lyon, Pechenino, and Ireton.

Local Auxiliary Members Attend Impressive Service

RACING MOVES UP IN POPULAR ESTEEM

By J. W. MARCHBANK

Sentiment in favor of a reduction in the commission on the pari mutuel pools at the race tracks of California from twelve to nine per cent is gaining momentum in all sections. Advocates of the liberalizing of the present statute point out racing is a sport with an appeal for all the people.

There was a time even in the memory of living racegoers when blood horse contests did not have the support accorded it nowadays. Racing has long been the national pastime of England, but until the recent expansion of interests in many states of the Union the thoroughbred game lagged behind baseball and football. The pendulum at present is swinging in the other direction, and a close struggle is impending in the "Popularity Stakes" between the three major outdoor sports.

In order to make the conditions favorable for racing each state should cut down the mutual "take" to the lowest possible figure. After mature deliberation I have come to the conclusion the Legislature should be asked to make the commission nine per cent.

The mutuel pools provide money for the overhead of the racing association, for exploitation purposes, and for the state. What is an equitable division of the portion of the wagers abstracted from the pools? Here is the way I answer that pertinent query:

Six per cent to the association.

One and one-half per cent for a purse for a big race, an ideal method of attracting well-to-do tourists.

One and one-half per cent to the state.

AMERICAN LEGION NOTES OF INTEREST

Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, will hold its first social dance of the season in Happy-Go-Lucky hall, 7343 Mission street, Saturday, March 31. These dances will be a monthly event, to be held on the last Saturday night of each month until further notice. We can assure our comrades and friends that they will have the same good times that they enjoyed at our former dances.

The San Mateo County Council whist and dance held in Redwood City, Saturday, March 24, was a big success. All who attended enjoyed a snappy sixteen hands of whist and dancing to the music of the Redwood City Post No. 105 orchestra. Much credit is due the 40 and 8 and the Ladies' Auxiliary for their hard work in making it a success. Excellent refreshments were served. The proceeds will go toward maintaining the San Mateo county headquarters at the San Francisco convention.

The Eighth District made 104.5 per cent of the March 15 quota. Three new Posts have been organized in the district, Sportsmen's Post No. 99, and Occidental Post No. 500, meeting in the San Francisco War Memorial, and Bay View Post No. 502, meeting at Third and Mendell avenue, making five new Posts that have been organized by District Commander R. L. Crane this year.

Be sure to be at our first dance of the season in Happy-Go-Lucky hall, tomorrow night, Saturday, March 31.

NATIVE DAUGHTERS VISIT VETERANS AT PALO ALTO

Several members and friends of El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., journeyed down to the Base hospital at Palo Alto on Sunday, March 18, and again visited the Veterans in candy and cookies and nuts were dis-Ward 12. Cigarettes, home made tributed among the boys and were thoroughly enjoyed. About 200 pair of old silk stockings were given to one of the veterans who makes beautiful rag rugs out of them.

Ward 12 is the receiving ward for mental cases and as some of the boys are not yet receiving compensation, this distribution of cigarettes and home made goodies was very much appreciated.

The visitors were shown all through the ward, which is extremely neat. The sleeping quarters are up on the second floor, while the supply rooms and clothes and living quarters are on the first floor.

This visit was under the leadership of Miss Eleanor Boyle, chairman of the Veterans Welfare Committee. Others in attendance were Anita Barner, Wilhelmina Barner, Anne Biggio, Louise Eliasen, Elsie Behringer, Leona Walker, Pauline Gregoire, Beatrice Reiners, Alice Oldham, Rena Mathias, Hans Falk, Ed Eliasen, Ted Clemens, John Biggio, Ray Toepher, Harry MsDonald and John Oldham.

Co-eds Injured in Crash

Ruth Goodin, 17, of Los Angeles, and Janet Nunklet, 19, Stanford university co-eds, received painful but not serious injuries in an automobile accident on the Pacheco Pass highway near Madera.

THOUSANDS VISIT TANFORAN RACES

What promises to be one of the most successful racing meets ever held in California got off to a brilliant start yesterday at Tanforan track in San Bruno. Thousands of spectators were on hand for the inaugural event, which lured some of the finest horses stabled at the track.

The meeting opened with several new features under the direction of J. W. Marchbank, widely-known California sportsman and breeder of fine horses. Among the novelties that attracted marked attention were the new pari-mutuel machines, which proved their efficiency and absolute accuracy at a test earlier in the week, watched by officials of the track and members of the California Horse Racing board.

There was a new feeling of harmony at the track, when it opened yesterday, following an announcement from the racing board that every co-operation will be extended to Tanforan to insure a successful meeting. The board made it clear that if racing was to return to its former place of favor and popularity in California, Tanforan must be the starting point, and upon the success of Tanforan depended to a large degree the future of the sport.

Hundreds of mounts are stabled at the big San Bruno plant for the Spring session, among them some of the finest in the West. Demands for stable room at the track greatly exceeded the available space, and many were forced to seek quarters elsewhere. Tnis was considered a good sign by officials at the track.

Again this year the receiving barn is being used. It was started last year, and won high praise from the racing czars of the state. Horses are stabled in the barn a half hour before the race in which they are to compete. This insures against tampering with the horses just before a race.

The meeting opened yesterday, but closed today in observance of Good Friday, and will reopen tomorrow, when it is expected a record crowd will be on hand. Several Sunday charity events will be held during the meeting.

SAN BRUNO WOMAN ENDS OWN LIFE BY SHOOTING

Mrs. Esther DeCourcey, of San Bruno, an active club woman and civic leader, ended her difficulties and worries last Sunday by taking her life. Ralph DeCourcey, her husband, and her father, Charles H. Weise, had gone out to fix the family car. When they came home an hour later and called to her, she did not answer. They found her on the bath room floor with a gun wound in her temple, and a gun in her hand. Dr. F. Holmes, the family physician, was called, but she was beyond medical aid.

Mr. and Mrs. DeCoursey and Mrs. DeCourcey's 13-year-old son, Elmer Hunt, resided at 418 Mastick avenue, San Bruno. Mr. DeCourcey is a charter member of the Daly City Post of Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Mrs. DeCourcey had many friends in Daly City, who will mourn the loss of a beloved friend. She often attended Veteran affairs held in this community.

MINING PROMISE BEST IN HISTORY

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

With milder weather coming, indications are prospectors will take full advantage of their opportunities to make the present year the most noteworthy in our annals. Established mines are being developed to the limit. That thirty-five dollars an ounce for the precious metal, part of the "New Deal," is working wonders.

Men high in the mining world are outspoken in their predictions of glowing returns for the industry in the approaching months. There are no "ifs" and "buts" about the future, the way they look at it. Grand times are at hand and they are saying as much.

Not so long ago I ran across a statement by J. L. Freeburn, general manager of the Chicagof Mining Company, a very successful Alaska concern, that appealed to me by its pointed conciseness. I read in the Juneau Empire:

"If the gold miner can't make money under existing conditions, he hasn't a mine or isn't a miner."

So it follows that the prospector is going out to get himself a mine, for men of that daring type are miners and will prove it conclusively. It may be the claim will be staked in California, Montana, Washington, or Alaska, but depend upon it the right kind of adventurer will find it. It's his business.

Not only gold but silver is gaining the attention it deserves. At a recent conference of Governors of Western states in Salt Lake City a resolution was adopted urging the immediate enactment of legislation establishing silver as a primary money metal with the price to be regulated in relation to that of gold. The importance of the white metal was demonstrated by the London Times getting out a special silver edition of twenty-four pages. Every phase of the present situation was covered in the articles in "The Thunderer."

One of the "stories" in the special was by Sir Henri Deterding, director of the Royal Dutch Petroleum Company, and well known in this country. He advancs the thought that underconsumption and not over-production is the cause of the world's financial troubles, and that the present lack of distribution is largely due to failure to return the buying power of silver.

Quit a number of authorities in England, which started the gold standard fashion about one hundred years ago, are of the opinion remonetization of silver must come before the world regains its balance.

Sidney Norman, in his informative column in the Vancouver Sun, tells of the enormous production of the Pioneer Mine in the Bridge River district. Pioneer is one of the richest on the continent, perhaps in the world, and has already produced enough gold to guarantee currency issue of nearly $15,000,000, at the present ratio of forty per cent gold coverage, and nearly $23,000,000 at the proposed coverage of twenty-five per cent.

Much of the credit for the splendid record of the company is given by mining men to David Sloan, managing director, who brought the mine from the prospect stage to its present position after trials and tribulations that seem inherent in the business of gold mining.

Mr. Norman says:

"The claim that Pioneer, with its neighbor, Bralorne, cover the richest mining area on the continent, is by no means beyond the mark. Two tons of picture rock, shipped from the Pioneer's eighth level west, brought $200,000 to the company's account. That was at the rate of $50 a pound, a value that has only been equalled a few times in North American by Mother Lode mines of California and at Goldfield, Nevada.

GOOD FRIDAY SERVICE IN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

A special Good Friday evening service will be held at 7:45 P. M., in Grace Presbyterian church, when the pastor will explain the meaning of Holy Week and its significance for the church. This meeting will not be a gloomy meeting, and at the close the young people of the church will serve tea, when the people will have an opportunity to meet socially. This is designed to meet the Scriptural injunction that we should "Rejoice Always."

Child Killed in Crash

A child was killed instantly and four adults were injured, one critically, when their automobile overturned in a ditch near Tulare last Friday night. The dead child was Walter Morrison, 20-months-old son of Alva Morrison, foreman of a Los Angeles glass factory.

JEFFERSON HIGH REQUIRES STUDY

Following a faculty meeting held on last Wednesday at the Jefferson Union high school, two very important announcements were made in a bulletin issued from the principal's office. Hereafter the lunch period at noon will be only thirty minutes instead of sixty, and there will be a ninth period added to the school day. The first change was made principally to co-operate with the parents who desire that their children shall not leave the school grounds at noon. One hour was considered too long for the noon period, and the extra time seemed to some of the parents only a temptation to make extended absences from the school grounds. As a matter purely of time, the faculty considered thirty minutes would be ample for the school lunch period.

The second announcement was the result of much thought by the faculty. For some time it has been the cause of concern on the part of the teachers that many of the pupils did not take their school work seriously enough to comply with the requirements for a passing grade. This matter has been under consideration by a committee of teachers for some time, with the result that the faculty decided to add to the school day an extra period for any student who had received a grade of "Failure" or "Incomplete." This is to apply either to grades for the term's work or to the regular daily work during the term.

Principal Ferguson, in commenting on these changes, said he believed they would be most beneficial. The shortening of the lunch period will

FOREIGN WARS VETS WELCOME RECRUITS

The members of Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars, held their regular semi-monthly meeting on Friday night, March 23, in the Masonic Hall.

Due to the installation of the new Post in San Francisco, a short meeting was held and the members of Old Glory Post attended the meeting, at which Department Commander E. J. Neron, Department Junior Vice-Commander Nichols and Department Senior Vice-Commander Seacord were present, having come from San Diego and San Jose respectively.

It was a very interesting meeting, and a very large class of recruits were initiated into the order.

We are happy to note that the Veteran is not being forgotten in the Legislative halls in Wasnington. It now appears that the service connected cases which we have fought so hard for, and the care of the widow and orphan, will be amply taken care of. Credit for this, however, must be given to the Veterans of Foreign Wars, whose committee in Washington have given and asked no quarter in this work.

One of the ways the people of this district can help the veteran is to continue deluging our Senators, Johnson and McAdoo, with the request that the Adjusted Service Certificate be paid now, not twenty-five years from now. It will mean many thousands of dollars in the pockets of the local merchants and much independence for the veteran now unemployed, and many of wnom are on relief rolls. We know of no better manner to relieve the relief in each community right now than pay the "bonus" right now.

This Post is supporting, without reserve, the plans of our Americanization committee to stamp out Communism in our schools. The large dailies are reporting much along this line, and it will be only a very short time until we have our well worked out plan in operation eradicating this element of destruction from the minds of our school children. A real American has no place in his home for Communism. Let's all get behind this movement and stamp it out in terms that cannot be misunderstood.

Burlingame Woman Found Dead in Garage

Mrs. Josephine F. Halford, of Burlingame, was found dead of monoxide gas poisoning early last Saturday, in a garage at the family home. She had eluded a private nurse and gone to the garage, where she shrouded her head with a piece of canvas after starting the motor of an automobile and lying down near the exhaust. The body, partly clothed, lay on a porch swing cushion which had been placed on the floor.

Mother of three minor children and wife of W. W. Halford, sales manager of a San Francisco grocery concern, Mrs. Halford had been ill for some time. She left no notes.

simplify the supervision of the noon period. Too much time at noon lends itself to the temptation to leave the school grounds, and especially to those who have cars, he said. The faculty was unanimous in voting to lengthen the school day, although this but added work to the teachers who already are carrying a heavy load. Mr. Ferguson said the teachers want the school life of every boy and girl to be successful, and are willing to do even more than their fair share of work to accomplish this. They know more than do the students the tragedy of a boy's going out into the world without an education. "Pupils who receive only 'F's' in their school work are preparing themselves for nothing better than a place in the breadlines," Mr. Ferguson often says in his office conferences with pupils.

This extra period which is being added to the school day is not to be considered as a form of punishment, but rather as a most serious effort by the school to help every student succeed in his work. Nor is it to be taken lightly by the students. The bulletin announces that all students who have received an "F" or an "Inc" in the previous term's work must report for the extra period until the deficiency is made up, and that any pupil failing to report for this period thereby automatically suspends himself from school unitl his parent or guardian has a conference with the principal.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS WEEK OF INTEREST TO ALL

County Superintendent of Schools Pansy Jewett Abbot, in speaking of Public Schools Week, says:

Public Schools Week, April 23 to April 28, should mean more to the people of San Mateo county this year than it ever has in the past, for an increased interest in the schools of California has awakened the citizens in every community. By the cooperative efforts of teachers, parents, and taxpayers, a clearer understanding of the needs of our boys and girls should be emphasized and the school and the home should be brought into a closer relationship.

I commend to the serious consideration of both the teachers and the general public active participation in the observance of Public Schools Week. By bringing the parents and taxpayers to the schools to see "children at work," and by inviting teachers and students to appear on public programs may we become beter informed citizens of San Mateo county. The success of the movement depends upon each one in the community sharing in the responsibility of putting over the spirit of Public Schools Week.

COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

Note—This is a weekly report from the San Mateo County Department of Public Health and Welfare, giving facts of importance for health protection, and a list of contagious diseases reported to the County Health Officer in the previous week.

Conquering Typhoid

A generation ago, tyhoid fever was one of the chief scourges of civilized man. It killed many times as many American soldiers in the Spanish-American war as died from wounds.

In twenty years, science had made such strides that, among all the millions of men in the Allied armies, there was an insignificant number of deaths from typhoid. The difference was due partly to improved sanitation, but vastly more to the fact that every soldier was required to have his protective "shots" against typhoid and paratyphoid. (Paratyphoid fever is entirely distinct from typhoid, but resembles it closely, although usually milder.)

It has been said that eradication of typhoid is only possible under military conditions, where prophylaxis is compulsory, but it has been demonstrated almost as completely in numerous communities having well organized health departments. The San Joaquin Local Health District is one which has wiped out typhoid by education and vaccination without any compulsion whatever.

Some of the causes of tyhoid epidemics in recent years are very interesting. The worst one of the century, in Montreal, a few years ago, with 5,000 cases and 500 deaths, was due to improperly pasteurized milk, contaminated by infected and careless milk handlers. Chicago had a severe outbreak, due to sewage-polluted oysters, which was cut short when the source was discovered by some clever public health detective work. Santa Ana had a severe epidemic with many deaths, due to a cross-connection between the city water main and a line carrying polluted water to be used for industrial purposes. Pittsburg, California, had a brief outbreak due to one day's failure to chlorinate the city water supply, known to be polluted. This outbreak was actually predicted for a certain time after it was discovered chlorination had failed.

Ask your doctor about typhoid vaccination before you go on your vacation. It is effective and inexpensive.

EXTEND EASTER GREETINGS TO BLIND OF PACIFIC AREA

Through the medium of Brailled cards joyous Easter greetings are conveyed by the Junior Red Cross to every blind person attending a State School for the Blind within the Pacific Area.

George T. Berry, director of Junior Red Cross in the western states, announces the distribution of one thousand cards to more than 400 sightless persons.

Members of Junior units throughout the nation have added to the Brailled cards, which were prepared as a national project, atractive embossed covers in Easter colors. Some of the Juniors caught the inspiration of Braillists, and with the aid of needles of pins pierced their cover designs, obtaining a Braille effect.

FIRE PREVENTION

Man is a peculiar annimal. He worries a lot about minor dangers, but gives little thought to greater risks which may cost him property and even life itself. Indifference to the danger from fire is an example of this.

People of the United States allow $500,000,000 worth of property to be destroyed by flames each year. Fires on farms, alone, cost an average of more than $93,000 a day. A farm fire occurs somewhere in this country every fifteen minutes. In five years $180,708,761 was the estimated farm loss from fires, most of which were preventable.

The farmer needs protection from fire, but he has been reluctant to help himself, although a large measure of protection would cost very little. When the average fire starts, one squirt of a fire extinguisher will put it out without serious loss. But given a few minutes to get headway it is beyond control, licking up the property owner's dearest possessions, and threatening the destruction of his family and himself.

A little fire extinguisher, kept in a convenient place for instant use, is so inexpensive as to mean practically nothing in the household budget. And handy for its vital job when a fire breaks out, its worth is incalculable in protecting house or barn, and it may often be the means of saving the lives of people and animals.

Dumbarton Bridge Operated at Loss

The Dumbarton Bridge Company closed the year 1933 with a net loss of $12,738 after deducting depreciation, bond interest and expense as against a surplus of $2,573 for 1932. Income from tolls for 1933 amounted to $133,592, against $149,680 for 1932.

Occupants of a car driven by J. W. Leggitt, of San Mateo, escaped injury when the machine overturned after colliding with a truck.

A PIECE OF PAPER

By COSMO HAMILTON

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

JON SHEPHERD'S mind was made up. He was going to kill a man in cold blood. He sat outside his trapper's shack on the marsh and cleaned his gun with a slow, brooding deliberation.

It was dusk when he had come home—home from the stretch they give to poachers in the county jail at Pennsboro. It was dark when he finished cleaning his gun. It smelled of oil and its barrels glinted in the thin new moonlight. He leaned it up against the shack.

All around him, in the Indian summer evening, the marsh stirred and was alive with old familiar sounds. Birds rustled in the grass; down near the landing a muskrat splashed; ducks were gabbling out in the bay. On the northern horizon the Pennsboro glow wavered between the flats and the stars. Over east, beyond the dunes, the autumn ocean mumbled and sucked at its strip of Carolina coast.

Jon Shepherd was part of all this, part of the life and soul of the marsh. He shared its somber moods, its invert fascination, its dark pride. Like the marsh, he could smile suddenly and become suddenly bleak. But now he had only murder in his heart. Only an obsession as cold, as deliberate, as it was unbalanced. He was going to kill the man who had been responsible for sending him to jail. He was going to do it tonight.

He lit a cigarette. The flare of the match snatched his face out of the dark. It exploded with noiseless light against the bony cheeks, the riveted black eyes, the aquiline nose, the thin lips gripping the cigarette. Jon Shepherd took two or three puffs on the cigarette and then flipped it into the damp marsh-grass, where it glowed and pulsed like a fire-beetle. It was tenacious, it wouldn't go out. He wondered whether Henry Garner would be as hard to kill.

For as long as Jon Shepherd could remember he and Henry Garner had been friends. Henry Garner had been rich; he himself had been poor. Henry Garner had been brought up in the big house beyond the woods near the Pennsboro road, while he had always lived in the trapper's shack. But none of these things had mattered until Henry Garner inherited the big house and began to invite fine guests down from Baltimore and Richmond and Philadelphia. Then one day he had warned Jon Shepherd to confine his trapping and shooting activities to the bay and the lower marsh, away from private property. He wanted to turn his own land into a sporting preserve. And when Shepherd had disregarded his warning—not once, but twice—Garner had sent him to jail.

The cigarette in the marsh-grass sizzled and went out. Shepherd stood up and reached for his gun. His body was a dark blotch against the shack, the shack was a pale blotch against the pines behind it, and the pines were a shaggy uncombed wilderness helter-skelter under the new moon. It was a grand night for loving or killing—whichever a man had a mind to do.

The killing itself would be very simple. There would be a short tramp through the woods to the big house near the Pennsboro road. Then there would be a creeping up to the window of the room where Henry Garner always sat about this time. After that there would be nothing left to do but ram the muzzle of the gun through a thin pane and coax a couple of tender triggers. It was all as simple as that. Jon Shepherd had no desire to leer at Henry Garner or to taunt him. He wanted to have it over with as soon as possible.

He tucked his shotgun in the crotch of his arm and walked unhurriedly towards the strip of woods that marked the beginning of Garner's land. He walked inexorably, like a machine that had been wound up and pointed at a certain spot. At the edge of the woods he paused to make sure that the safety catch of his gun was all right. Although he knew every inch of the way, he didn't want his gun to go off if he tripped in the underbrush. Then he faced around for a last look eastward. The marsh curved darkly around the bay, and the bay lay asleep against the dim shoulders of the dunes. Beyond the dunes, the beat of the ocean seemed to keep time with the beat of the blood in Shepherd's chest and wrists and temples. But there was no need to hurry. There was no use getting excited.

Shepherd walked through the woods and skirted the field that lay in front of the big house where Garner lived. His state of mind was quite different from that of the average story-book murderer. No lurking fear clutched at his heart; none of the usual drops of sweat stood out on his brow. Everything was matter-of-fact, even the light that gleamed in the downstairs window and guided him, as he had known it would.

By using the cover of a clump of bushes it was easy to creep up to the lighted window. Shepherd crouched under the sill and gripped his gun with both hands, ready for a smashing blow at the pane. Then he stood up deliberately and looked in. His face slid up into the light and poised there, vulpine, staring.

Nobody was there. Nobody was in the room.

For a moment it seemed to Shepherd that his plan had failed. Every long slow day in the Pennsboro jail had focussed his obsession on this time and on this place. Then he realized that Garner must be somewhere very near. The coals of the fire smouldered in the grate and there was an open magazine on the arm of Garner's usual chair. There were two glasses and a bottle on the table, which indicated that Garner had a visitor. Garner and his visitor, whoever it was, must be out on the veranda at the other side of the house, because the night was beautiful and warm.

Keeping close to the wall, Shepherd edged around the corner and worked his way towards the veranda. Suddenly he heard Garner's voice say something in a low tone. Then it stopped and there was no answer. Shepherd reached the side of the veranda and paused, wondering how best to do this killing quickly. Recognition didn't matter, because everybody would know he had shot Garner anyway.

Just then he heard the other voice. It was a woman's, soft and thrilling, and it was saying something that seemed very important. It was a voice that had a startling effect on the man crouching in the shadows with the gun. At first vaguely familiar, like a vanished dream, then it began to burn its way into him with a soft fiery music that washed away his murderous obsession and his consciousness of time and place. In all the world there was only this voice—and he was listening to it.

"It's just because I love you so much that I must tell you, Henry," it said. "If I hurt you it's only because it would hurt me more to be divided from you by any secret."

"Tell me," said Garner's voice quietly.

"It was a wounded boy behind the lines." The other voice was very steady. "He was going back to the front. It wasn't pity, either. It was something else that I couldn't explain even to myself. He was so alone, so brooding, so passionately strange. My sense of values was warped then, too, I suppose. Anyway, he loved me. He wanted me."

"I see," said Garner's voice.

"It happened the night before he went back." The other voice faltered a little. "I never saw him again. He wrote me letters for a while—sweet, strange, illiterate letters. And, foolishly, perhaps, I answered one of them. But that has never worried me. I trusted him."

There was a little silence and then Garner's voice said, "Yes, that was foolish. A letter like that is only a piece of paper, but it can be a terrible weapon. But it can't be now, can it?"

"No," said the other voice. "It can't be—now."

The crouching figure beside the veranda straightened up and leaned against the wall. Jon Shepherd's face was a pale expressionless mask in the faint light.

"You're brave," said Garner's voice. There was a slight sound like a kiss. "It's past now. I love you."

When Jon Shepherd got back to his shack he went inside and groped around for the box in which he kept his shotgun shells. Then he broke his gun mechanically, took out the two unused shells, and put them back in the box.

There was an old duffle bag in one corner of the room, and Shepherd went over to it and knelt down. He knew exactly where the letter was. His hand closed on it and pulled it out. He crouched there with it in the darkness. A piece of paper? A terrible weapon? Were these all this wonderful letter could be?

Suddenly he struck a match and touched the flame to the dog-eared envelope. The paper began to burn brighter and brighter until the light was dancing with the shadows on the walls. But Jon Shepherd's shadow was huge and quiet and shapeless.

When the letter burned down and began to scorch his fingers he dropped it on the floor and went outside. There was no moon. The marsh and bay and dunes were one blur under the stars. Shepherd walked down the rotting boardwalk to the landing. His old boat was still there—half full of water, but that didn't matter. He climbed into it and began to row.

He rowed the boat towards the Pennsboro lights that wavered above the northern horizon. Pretty soon he noticed, without surprise, that his shack was burning. He leaned on his oars to watch it. It became a gigantic torch that lighted his farewell view of the marsh with a red glare.

Jon Shepherd bent to his oars again. The bay was rippling up. The breeze was shifting into the northeast. There would be fine duck hunting weather in a day or two. And Garner's gun would be booming back there in the flats.

Coats on the Spring Style Program

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THE calendar declaring advent of spring, the thermometer contradicting the glad news by registering winter's lingering touch, and in the meantime the spring style parade schedules for an early date—what to wear, aye, that's the question! With what tantalizing persistence does the clothes problem disturb our peace of mind at this time of the year.

Howsoever, here's to take cheer, for we believe you will agree with us that in the perfectly stunning capecoats in the picture we find the answer. It is not only that the soft, downy light-as-a-feather rabbit worsteds which fashion these coats assure protection against almost anything which is apt to happen in the way of weather, but when it comes to "looks" it would be difficult to conceive of a new spring outfit which could surpass either of these distinctive models.

Both are developed in reversible fabric of soft rabbit woolen, with one side pastel monotone and the other side plaided in harmonizing shades. This type of material is well suited to the draped lines favored for spring, being especially adaptable to the styling of the hood or monk collars, which so smartly detail many of the newer coats. The fabric feels very soft against the flesh, having only the finest rabbit fur woven into it. In its modernized version it has no resemblance to the so-called hairy fabrics introduced last fall, which were ofttimes rough in surface and inclined to feel scratchy. Combining as it does, light weight with warmth, weaves of rabbit woolen are acceptable for wear from now into late spring and then some.

Nor has the half been told of the charm of this material since mere black and white print fails to convey the message of beguiling color which these reversible weaves carry. The very spirit of spring breathes through the lovely pastel monotones reversed as they are with large plaids in harmonizing shades. All you have to do is to know your colors and the salespeople will do the rest, placing before your eager eyes either the materials to be bought by the yard or the very garments themselves, styled as in the illustration, of rabbit worsteds in exquisitely springlike grayed greens such as stand foremost on fashion's color card, or in the misty pastel blues which are of wide appeal or mayhap in a voguish dusky pink, or if you prefer in one of the new yellowish tones which spell chic with emphasis, the color symphony ever enhanced with a blended reverse plaiding.

In the model to the left the coat and long cape are made all in one. It is interesting to note, too, that the coat part is backless to the waist, so that the cape clings closely at the shoulders. The wrap-around effect is characteristic of this season's slenderized silhouettes.

The shorter caped ensemble to the right is styled along unusual lines. The unique side closing with buttons which look like shells from the seashore, and the standup collar which fences the throat are smart features. The plaid-lined cape is made with long belt-ends which pull through a slit at the back, tieing at the front casually and adjustably, so that the garment can be fitted exactly to the wearer's figure. A one-piece dress with elbow length sleeves is worn under this cape. It has a high neck closing with a narrow tie of the reversible fabric swatches of the plaid appearing on the tops of two little pockets.

FOR HER TROUSSEAU

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This lovely nightdress, you'd almost think it a summer evening gown, was one shown at the spring fashion openings in Paris. It is exquisitely made and would bring joy to the heart of any debutante. For the spring bride's trousseau it is ideal. It is fashioned of pale blue georgette. The same choice lace which makes the shoulder ruffles and yoke, is cut out to form the double band incrustations and the cunning bow tie.

Spring Fabrics

New fabrics include "feathered" organdies barred and dotted with cotton chenille, and organdies embroidered in big chenille dots for summer evening frocks.

FEMININE STYLES LOSE MASCULINITY

Dresses are finally appearing without mannish cut. A whole parade of little beauties wear sports outfits that are soft and breezy with ruffles.

The tie silks, which a year ago would simply have shrieked masculine attire, are this year's feminine delights. Whether soft or stiff tie silk, the collars are ruffled or pleated. This frilly touch takes care of all the trimming touches on the dresses.

It's a positive fact now that spring is to be lively, and very hot tamale. The Mexican style and coloring have caught on in a bright way.

In the sports department the two-piece dress is being shown in a tuck-in style with the top and the skirt in different colors. It's a nice idea as it offers an alternative blouse. If you don't like this idea, you can trim the blouse with the skirt fabric, giving it a nice ensemble touch.

Bows at Heels Are Fad in Spring Footwear Styles

The back of the shoe will have no reason to feel slighted this spring. In keeping with the extensive use of bows at the back of dresses, new footwear styles include dainty little bows at the heels.

In some of the styles this new heel bow is of ribbon matching the dress in color and carried through loops at the side of the shoe.

Shankless kid opera pumps, with no sole under the arch, are another innovation in footwear fashions—one on which a designer is said to have spent five years of experimentation. Instead of a sole the upper of the shoe is brought down under the arch and seamed.

Spring Note in Scarfs

"When I first came here," she said, "I thought I didn't want to have anything to do with the newspaper women. Miss Sharp wrote me and asked me for an interview and I declined to give it to her. Her reply was a masterpiece. She told me that her bread and butter depended on getting something about me, but that, after all, was beyond the point. If her newspaper couldn't secure a real interview with me, it would fake one. If she didn't write that article—false or true—some one else would. If I would co-operate with the newspaper women, give them what they had a recognized right to ask of me, as Vice President's wife, I'd never regret it. If I told them anything in confidence, that confidence would be respected. In short, that they were prepared to help me in every way they could if I would only let them. If I wouldn't, all sorts of false and sensational reports would inevitably appear about me. I sent for Miss Sharp and had a frank talk with her. We've been the best of friends ever since. And she's kept her word—absolutely."

"Oh, thanks," began Anne, "I'll—" Mrs. Hammel interrupted.

"She belongs to a rather interesting organization—the Woman's National Press club. All the society editors do. I'm going to one of their Monday luncheons—jolly, informal affairs—as guest of honor next week. I wonder—would you like to come with me? It could be very easily arranged. You'd have a good time, and—well, I think it would be a good plan all around."

Anne's quick gratitude was so real that Mrs. Hammel was more touched than she betrayed.

"And of course you must start right in making calls. Today. Diplomatic day. You'll find a list of the embassies in your copy of the Congressional directory. If your husband hasn't brought yours up from the office he's been very remiss. Every senator's wife has one, with her name stamped neatly in the lower right-hand corner. 'Mrs. Neal Conrad' will look very nice, you'll see. Only the ambassadresses, remember. The ministers' wives come first to you. And return Madame Estavi's call, of course. She's really a dear, though very shy. You don't need to be afraid of her. Then go through the cards that were left you yesterday, and return the calls of any 'cave dwellers' who may be receiving Saturday and Sunday. Monday go to all the Supreme court ladies. Tuesday of course you'll go to the congressional ladies if any have called on you. No? Well, then, that's easy. Wednesday—I think, if I were you, I'd go to see Mrs. Standish, the wife of the secretary of state. She's a perfect dear, and you'll have such a good time at her house; you may not get much farther anyway. Then next Thursday, if I were you, I should receive again myself. And—er—do it right. After that, you ought to receive and make calls on alternate Thursdays, till you've been the rounds. But this time, I'd—er— Mrs. Roper and Mrs. Ranger will tell every one they see, of course, about yesterday, and next Thursday your house will be packed with people who've come to see if they were told the truth. And my, what a disappointment they'll get." Mrs. Hammel gave vent to hearty laughter. "I'd like to be there myself, my dear, to see the fun. If I can possibly make it, I shall be."

She rose and kissed Anne on the cheek.

"Run along now, and get to work, my dear," she said. "I've lots of confidence in you."

This confidence was not misplaced. Doggedly, even as she had scrubbed floors and taught school doggedly, Anne set to work to pay her official calls. But Neal came home on the street cars from the senate office building, and the children walked home from school, so that she would not have to go for them. It was barely half-past three the next Thursday when, as Mrs Hammel had predicted, Anne's callers began to come. The polite ambassadresses instantly returning their official visit. The Supreme court ladies, whose program was not yet very full. Mrs. Standish, always sweet, efficient and poised. The excitement eaters and curiosity seekers regaled by Mrs. Roper and Mrs. Ranger. Miss Sharp and several other members of the Woman's National Press club, who had been most agreeably impressed by Anne when she had come, with Mrs. Hammel, to their Monday luncheon. The "professional callers" who are the bane of every woman in official life, and who go from house to house either because they are utterly idle, or because they are actually hungry, supplying themselves, in the latter case, with unlimited sandwiches and cakes. A scattering of tourists and government workers from the Conrads' own state. Ministers, colonels, a judge or two, with their wives. In short, the kaleidoscopic fragment of Washington life which confronts the official hostess on her day at home.

The door was opened for these callers by a wholly correct butler from Rauschers' who was in great demand for "at homes." Anne stood in front of a bright little fire, which glowed under a mantel banked with flowers, to receive her guests, her golden hair wound like a coronet above the curls which framed her rosy face, her slim figure supple and graceful under its sheath of rose-colored satin. Neal, scintillating with cordiality, sartorially perfect in gray trousers and cutaway, stood beside her. An immaculate maid, the stiff, embroidered bretelles of her apron snowy against her black silk uniform, was hovering over a tea table, on which silver dishes containing tomato jelly sandwiches, angel food, tiny frosted cakes, and tinier biscuits stuffed with chicken salad, were scattered over an embroidered tablecloth. And, pouring the tea, bland, and benign above the silver service, sat Mrs. Hammel.

The "leader" in the society section of the Inquirer on the following Sunday was written by Miss Sharp. A picture of Anne, surmounted it. This picture left nothing to be desired; neither did the headline "Vice President's wife pours for Mrs. Conrad." Neither did the text which accompanied these.

"Mrs. Neal Conrad, whose husband's recent appointment to the senate has been a matter of national interest, made her bow to official society in Washington last Thursday, at the delightful reception which she gave in the charming residence on New Hampshire avenue which she and Senator Conrad have leased for the winter. Mrs. Conrad was charmingly gowned in a Lanvin confection of pink, one of the many beautiful dresses which she brought home with her from Paris, where she and Senator Conrad spent the summer. Mrs. Hammel, who has been one of the first to welcome Mrs. Conrad, with whom she has many tastes in common, to Washington, presided at the perfectly appointed tea table. Among the many distinguished guests were noticed . . ."

There was more, a great deal more. But that was all that mattered. The first hard weeks had been lived through, the first dreadful mistakes lived down, the "features" about the washtub and the cow forgotten. Anne had begun to "arrive."

CHAPTER X

"I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office in which I am about to enter—so help me God."

Neal, facing the Vice President, with his back to the senate chamber, stood beside Senator Brown, repeating the words, a phrase at a time, after Mr. Hammel. Anne, sitting in the senators' gallery, her cold hands clenched tightly in her lap, colder chills of excitement creeping up and down her spine and stabbing swiftly at her heart, looked down at him with misty eyes.

It was the opening day of congress, and Neal had repeated the oath of office administered to a new senator, and then, literally, had taken his seat.

Anne had not been to the Capitol since she had visited it, years before, on her honeymoon journey to Washington. She confronted the doorman of the senators' gallery without qualms. But he was struggling with a persistent mob which was striving to get past him, and which even his massive bulk and grim manner could not entirely stem.

"Mrs. Conrad?" he snarled, peering at her with suspicious, bulging eyes. "Senator Conrad's wife? Say, that don't go down any more. He's got three wives in there already."

There was a titter of derision about her, and Anne felt her cheeks growing hot.

"I will try to get some one to identify me," she said with a composure which she was very far from feeling.

"That won't be very hard," a merry voice boomed behind her; and turning suddenly, she almost bumped into Mrs. Hammel. "Come and sit with me, my dear. Delighted to have you. You know Mrs. Hastings, don't you—the speaker's wife?—You and Mrs. Standish are friends already, of course. Now then—right down there on the left—no, not in the front row. Those are the seats reserved for Mrs. Shaw. But the ones directly behind."

AUTO STRIKE AVERTED

It was indeed good news to many in every section of our country, the announcement last Monday that President Roosevelt had taken a hand in the settlement of the disagreement between the automobile manufacturers and labor leaders, and that a threatened nation-wide strike had been averted.

The President announced a settlement of the dispute between the manufacturers and the workers, with a declaration granting the absolute freedom of collective bargaining for labor.

The settlement of the controversy has in all probability brought an end to the controversy which might have resulted in a widespread strike, and considerable loss to both parties in the controversy.

Arbitration of differences seems to be the real solution of problems of this kind. Common sense and consideration for the other fellow's ideas can often avert serious trouble.

Let's hope that the controversy has been finally and properly concluded.

HOLY WEEK

The most significant period of the Christian year is Holy Week, the week before Easter, beginning with Palm Sunday, which this year fell on March 25.

Palm Sunday celebrates Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem and the strewing of palm branches in his path by the multitude.

Maundy Thursday commemorates the Last Supper and the washing of the disciples' feet; also Christ's agony in Gethsemane and his betrayal by Judas.

Good Friday represents the day of the crucifixion and is celebrated in Catholic and Anglician churches with great solemnity.

Easter Even is the name given to the entire day of twenty-four hours between Good Friday and Easter, a period for prayer and religious contemplation.

Easter Sunday, the most joyous day of the Christian calendar, commemorates the resurrection, and this year falls on April 1. In the early history of the church, Easter was observed on various dates by different bodies of Christians, but the Council of Nice, in the year 325, fixed it as the first Sunday following the full moon occurring on or next after the vernal equinox, March 21.

Easter Sunday may come as early as March 22, or as late as April 25, and its date governs all ecclesiastical days from Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent, to Trinity Sunday, eight weeks after Easter.

CO-OPERATION IS NECESSARY

People who are interested in the growth of the home city always have an opportunity of assisting in its development. When they look at the very low prices of the various items offered there, they will readily see that it pays to buy from the business concerns of the home city.

Co-operation is the life of a city, or community, and every citizen should co-operate by spending his money with the live business concerns of the home city.

Stagnation of business in a city means hard times for all. Good business means prosperous times for all.

Co-operation creates—stagnation kills.

Progressive citizens are loyal citizens. They co-operate with local business concerns, and by so doing they keep their city and community progressive.

Lack of co-operation is the greatest hindrance to the progress of any city.

AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS

In the early days of flying, if our memory serves us correctly, most persons involved in airplane accidents were killed outright. At least, a very large percentage were. It was a little surprising, therefore, to read a recent government report which states that during the last three years only one out of seven persons involved in airplane crashes were fatally hurt.

More surprising still is the statement that of all those involved in air accidents 60 per cent received no injuries at all. About 15 per cent were killed, 10 per cent were seriously injured, and 15 per cent were only slightly hurt.

Causes of accidents have been studied, resulting in the conclusion that about 57 per cent were due to errors by pilots, structural failures in planes caused a little more than 9 per cent, motor failures 17 per cent, while miscellaneous and doubtful causes account for the remainder.

During the three year period covered by the report there was a total of 2,994 accidents recorded, involving 9,558 persons, of whom 1,413 were killed, 947 were quite severely injured, 1,366 received minor injuries, and 5,805 were unhurt.

A PRISON FOR WOMEN

Six years ago a new Federal prison for women was opened at Alderson, West Virginia, with Dr. Mary B. Harris as superintendent. A recent writer describes it as "a Federal junk yard where women are sent who have broken the nation's laws," but adds that under the guidance of Dr. Harris "these misfits of society are being reconditioned to such good purpose that the prison world in general is sitting up and taking notice."

Dr. Harris has demonstrated that strict prison discipline may well be combined with sympathetic interest in her unfortunate wards, a majority of whom are drug addicts when they are sent to her. While many of these cases seem hopeless, much success has been attained already in effecting what appear to be permanent cures.

A striking illustration of the efficacy of the prison's system is seen in the fact that of 170 paroles granted, only one has been broken. Many affectionate letters are received by the superintendent and her assistants from women who were former inmates of the prison, and quite a number have returned for a friendly visit.

The prison is conducted on the theory that there is some good in everyone, and it is the business of prison authorities to develop the best in its wards, at the same time firmly repressing the evil tendencies so far as possible. This theory is working out well in practice.

MUST GO AFTER BUSINESS

This is the day of keen competition. The store that will not fight for business soon goes out of business.

A fighting force for business is needed by every business concern—one full of life, and with a solid front to go after it.

Business comes where it is invited and stays where it is well treated. Those who want enough business so they can stay in business invite newspaper advertising.

Anything worth having is worth advertising. People know that fact. Business concerns who do not invite business by advertising find that it goes to the stores who do invite it.

Ever increasing sales by the stores that are continuous advertisers are convincing testimony that the majority of the people buy from the stores who invite their business through newspaper advertising.

CAPITAL IS TIMID

Why is recovery from the economic depression so slow? Because capital is afraid. Many millions of dollars now lie inactive in banks because the owners of this money are possessed with fear.

Persons who invested readily in stocks, bonds, real estate and varied business enterprises during the prosperous times now hold back and await developments. And so long as they hold back through fear, so long will a resumption of normal industrial business activity be retarded.

It is inevitable that general prosperity will come back in time, but the timidity of capital may delay a return of normal conditions. And it seems that little can be done to overcome that timidity.

Big newspapers suggest this and that with respect to running the city, yet poke fun at the country editor who insist that the mudhole in front of the postoffice needs attention.

Obituaries often refer to an indulgent husband and father. In many cases "indulging" would be the more appropriate word.

A JOB FOR STATESMEN

Many experienced observers of world affairs are greatly alarmed over the present outlook. Some go so far as to predict that another European war is inevitable, and perhaps not a long way off. Even the most optimistic must agree that a serious situation exists.

This, we believe, is not because any nation really wants war, but it is because economic conditions are so desperate in most Europeans countries that the governments in power are unable to satisfy the demands of their own people for a chance to earn their daily bread. There is suffering in America—real suffering—among a large element of our population. But it is slight in comparison with what is being experienced in some other parts of the world.

The pitiful paradox is that there is enough food and clothing and raw materials in the world to make everyone fairly comfortable, if some means could be found for their rational distribution.

The granaries of the United States and Canada are almost bursting with surplus wheat, while millions are now going hungry. There is an immense cotton surplus, while millions go unclad. Other basic commodities go begging because those who need them have no money with which to buy.

Will the statesmen and business leaders of the world be able to avert the crisis which these conditions threaten to bring about?

Fiji Island cannibals don't think much of white folks as a regular diet, according to a returned traveler. He says the natives consider the whites too salty, but manage to eat them by mixing their flesh with a certain kind of stew. Perhaps they never got hold of one of the numerous fresh guys who are in evidence almost everywhere.

COMMITTEE MAY SOLVE OCEAN SHORE PROBLEM

Possibility that the state may institute condemnation proceedings to secure a right-of-way for the Ocean Shore highway was seen Wednesday as a committee representing a united San Mateo county prepared to wage a campaign to carry the project through to a successful conclusion.

The committee was appointed by C. V. Thompson, chairman of the San Mateo county board of supervisors, at a largely attended meeting of representative citizens from all parts of the county, directors of Joint Highway District No. 9, and state officials, at the Burlingame city hall last Tuesday night.

The committee to push the project was appointed by Dr. Thompson as follows: Col. Frederick Peterson, of Burlingame, chairman; Senator Harry L. Parkman, of San Mateo; Mayor C. A. Buck, of Burlingame; Mayor A. R. Cotton, of San Mateo; Mayor William J. Dusel, of Redwood City; Mayor Joseph Quinlan, of South San Francisco; Mayor W. H. Weeden, of Menlo Park; City Manager J. S. COUNTY ARBITRATION BOARD ORGANIZED TO KEEP PEACE

The members of the county arbitration board appointed by the San Mateo county board of supervisors, prepared last Tuesday for their first meeting to be held soon at the home of Damian L. Reynolds, chairman.

The board is believed to be the first of its kind in the state, and is clothed with the unusual power to step into any industrial dispute in the county in an effort to bring warring sides together.

The first move of the board, it is understood, will be to formulate a code of rules and regulations and the adoption of policies designed to aid the board in its work. After the initial meeting, members of the board will pay a visit to the coast, where it is believed the new organization will meet its first test in a few weeks.

Formation of the county arbitration board is said to have been the result of plans worked out by Mrs. Robert McWilliams, of the San Mateo County Federation of Women's Clubs, and state officials.

TWO VIEWS ON SILVER

After the first flush of enthusiasm over President Roosevelt's proclamation fixing the value of silver had waned somewhat, two distinct views concering the move appeared. One is that it will cause a world-wide increase in the value of the metal, thus restoring the lost purchasing power of the silver-standard nations. The other is that its importance has been exaggerated, and that it will be necessary to decree unlimited silver coinage, at a fixed ratio to gold, before the President's purpose is finally achieved. Mr. Roosevelt can do this under authority contained in a rider to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The President himself has emphasized the importance he places on this power, and that has lent weight to the belief that he will exercise it in the near future. Until that is done, it is the general opinion of the silver producers that stimulation of their industry will be limited and qualified, and of trade experts that the silver-standard countries will remain under the general level so far as purchasing power is concerned. The next move, whatever it is, will be of vital importance to the commercial well being, and the economic recovery, of the world.

A writer who digs up interesting sport items of bygone days tells that Charley Moran, pitching for Nashville Academy against Vanderbilt University, once struck out nine men in one inning, a world's record. Yet in that inning Vanderbilt scored six runs. The explanation is that Moran's catcher let six third strikes get by him.

FOOD VALUE OF DRIED FRUITS

Worth-While Contribution to Nutrition Problem.

By EDITH M. BARBER

DRIED fruits make a worthwhile contribution to the nutrition problem. They score high on account of their economy. The fruits which lend themselves to drying best are apples, peaches, prunes, figs and grapes. After drying, they retain a large amount of their original content of minerals and probably most of the vitamins. While not all of them are heavily endowed with vitamins, as are citrus fruits, we can count on them for worthwhile amounts toward our daily supply. They differ in the kind of minerals which they provide, and this makes another good reason for varying our choice. As we have often mentioned before in this column, a varied diet is the best.

All of these fruits make a further contribution through their organic acids and through their fiber which stimulates the passage of food through the digestive canal. Prunes and figs are more laxative than the others.

Perhaps you have noticed the great improvement in late years in the quality of the dried fruits offered us. They are packed carefully and are generally cleaned so that they do not need more than an average washing. If you soak the fruits, be sure to use the same water for cooking. For that reason do not be too liberal in adding water to them. If you have not time to soak them, you will find that most of them will cook almost as quickly if you use boiling water. Dried fruits should be kept covered during the cooking, and the sugar should not be added until they are tender. You will find that sweet prunes need no additional sugar if the fruit is allowed to cool before it is uncovered.

Prune Pudding.

2½ cups cold water
1 cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon salt
1-inch piece stick cinnamon
1 cup boiling water
⅓ cup cornstarch
1 tablespoon lemon juice.

Pick over and wash prunes, soak in cold water and boil until soft in same water. Stone prunes, return pulp to liquid. Add sugar, salt, cinnamon, boiling water, and simmer ten minutes. Mix cornstarch with cold water. Stir into prune mixture and stir constantly over heat five minutes. Remove cinnamon, add lemon juice, mold, chill and serve with cream.

Raisin Stuffing

2 cups bread crumbs
⅔ cup melted butter
1 cup seeded raisins, cut in pieces
1 cup sliced apples
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ teaspoon sage

Mix ingredients and use to stuff duck or pork.

Apricots With Bananas.

½ pound dried apricots
Sugar
3 bananas

Soak apricots in just enough water to cover for several hours. Cook until very tender. Force through strainer and stir in sugar to taste. Cut bananas in halves and arrange in a greased baking dish. Pour apricot pulp over the bananas. Bake in an oven 375 degrees fifteen minutes. Serve hot or cold. For serving hot, two tablespoonfuls of butter may be put on top of the fruit just before serving.

Works 12 Years on Auto Chain Device

Fairmont, W. Va.—The twelve years that D. E. Thomas has spent in perfecting a device to attach automobile chains while the vehicle is moving have almost deprived him of vision enough to view the invention.

The aged Fairmont inventor, continuing his work despite failing eyesight during the past four years, is now almost blind. The completed device, which it is claimed attaches or removes the chain when a machine is traveling at any speed, will be exhibited soon.

This Attorney Foils a Murder by Premonition

Kovno, Lithuania.—How a premonition of his own approaching murder, coupled with speedy police work saved the life of a Kovno notary was revealed here with the arrest of the notary's stepson and a friend credited with being the master mind of the intricate plot.

K. Skema has had a flourishing practice for years. He gradually built up a fortune, and the safe in his office was temptingly full. A short time ago there were 3,000,000 litas in it consigned by clients to Skema's care.

The eighteen-year-old stepson, Vadja Gailevitsch, was blessed with a good allowance and the best of clothes, but that was not enough. Allegedly at the instigation of Algirdas Puijda, twenty-four, he began to look longingly at the safe.

The police say the two planned long and carefully. They rejected a scheme to mask themselves and shoot Skema. Gas, administered in some cunning and romantic way, was much better.

Equipped with all necessary paraphernalia, the two youths broke into the notary's office on Sunday night. Two glasses of chemicals were set on the desk and attached to the door handle with string.

The idea was simple. Skema would open the door, the glasses would tip over, and the fluids mingle, forming a gas which, according to calculations would kill the notary within five seconds. Armed with gas masks, the pair was to enter, nullify the gas with another compound, and place a glass of prussic acid in the dead man's hand, to simulate suicide.

Police, however, had been warned by Skema of his premonition, and caught the would-be murderers just after they had set their trap.

Younger Students Get Better College Grades

Berkeley, Calif.—Students who enter college at an age of under sixteen and a half years are more likely to receive better grades than persons entering at an older age, a survey by Prof. Noel Keys, of the University of California, shows.

Professor Keys, of the School of Education, found that from 180 to 280 freshmen under sixteen and a half years of age enter the university each year. Of these, from ten to twenty are fifteen years old or less.

The survey resulted in the conclusion that the under-age group is interested in more activities than is the advanced group.

"Those who entered at fourteen or fifteen made even a better record than those who entered at sixteen," Doctor Keys said. In the junior and senior classes, the average number of extra-curricula activities per student was one-third greater for the under-age group.

Attractive Vases

Some of the modern commercial bottles are used as vases for flowers. Those with two handles are recommended. Those with and without handles, one or two, are well suited to use as water jugs. The shape and size of the bottles suggests their use. The bottles, either because of interesting ornamentation or unusual beauty of shape, must merit being used decoratively.

Egg Frosting

When making an egg frosting, add half an eggshell of water with a pinch of salt and cream of tartar when the whites begin to froth and you will considerably increase the quantity of frosting.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

"Adam's Apple"

EVERYBODY knows that "Adam's Apple" is an anatomical rather than a horticultural reference; yet, stay a moment, could it not be both? Let us see.

Anatomically speaking, Adam's Apple is, colloquially speaking, the "huggleguggle"—more scientifically known as the thyroid cartilage visible in the human throat, and in many people, very much accentuated because of its enlargement.

Horticulturally speaking, however, Adam's Apple is so-called from the superstition that it owes its existence to the fact that a piece of the forbidden fruit stuck in Adam's throat.

So, there you are!

Fifty Famous Frontiersmen

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

An Adventurous Ice Man

IN THE spring of 1831 some of the citizens of Boston were vastly amused at a camp that had been established on an island in Boston harbor. For Nathaniel J. Wyeth, an enterprising merchant who had made a great success in the ice business, was planning to engage in salmon fishing and fur trading in the Pacific Northwest, and in the island camp he was trying to train the men of his expedition for their future careers in the Wild West.

He had prevailed upon some fellow Bostonians to outfit a ship which would sail around Cape Horn to the mouth of the Columbia river while he was leading his expedition overland. His Yankee ingenuity had devised an amphibious wagon to travel both on land and water, but when he reached St. Louis in the autumn of 1831, the jeering laughter of seasoned trappers and traders there who knew the western country caused him to abandon his queer vehicle.

At Independence Wyeth's company fell in with a party of trappers led by William Sublette and Robert Campbell, who allowed the eastern tenderfoot to travel with them up into Wyoming where the "down-easters" received some unexpected thrills in battles with hostile Blackfeet. Some of Wyeth's men deserted him but he pushed on and in October, 1832, reached Fort Vancouver, only to find that the expected ship had been wrecked and he was stranded in the wilderness. But Dr. John McLoughlin, Hudson's Bay company factor at Vancouver, received the destitute Americans hospitably and gave them food.

Undismayed by this experience, Wyeth returned to Boston, organized another expedition, sent out another ship and set out again across the continent.

In the summer of 1834 he built a fort on the Snake river in Idaho to which was given the name of Fort Hall. Leaving part of his men here, Wyeth pushed on and built another, named Fort Williams, on an island at the mouth of the Willamette. This time his ship did arrive safely and he started on his trading enterprise. But he had not counted on the competition of the Hudson's Bay company and this soon forced him out of business. Finally, on the eve of the panic of 1837, he gave up his dreams of profit in Oregon and returned to his ice business in Boston. But his labors had not been in vain. To him fell the honor of raising at Fort Hall the first American flag ever to float over that part of the country. Some of the men he left behind in Oregon stayed there to farm and formed the nucleus of the settlements which were later to make that country American rather than British territory.

The Bents of Bent's Fort

WHAT Fort Laramie was to the Oregon trail, Bent's fort on the Arkansas was to the Santa Fe trail. It was a landmark for pilgrims to the New Mexican capital; it is one outstanding name in all the literature dealing with that historic highway into the West; though the fort itself has long since passed away, its name is a perpetual memorial to four brothers and more especially to one of them, William Bent.

William, George, Robert and Charles Bent were scions of Massachusetts Puritan stock. Their father, Silas Bent, settled in St. Louis about 1804 and became the first district judge in that city. Living in the "fur capital" led his sons naturally into that business.

In 1826 the four Bents and Ceran and Marcelin St. Vrain, French-Canadians, built a trading post on the Upper Arkansas between the present cities of Pueblo and Canon City, Colo. Finding it necessary to be nearer the best hunting grounds, they moved down the river two years later, and began to erect the giant adobe structure which was to become so famous.

When it was completed in 1832 they gave it the name of Fort William, in honor of William Bent, who by this time had emerged as the natural leader of the company. But visitors to it—trappers, traders, explorers, army officers—called it Bent's fort and that name stuck. Expansion of their business called the two St. Vrains and the other three Bents elsewhere much of the time, but William Bent remained in his citadel of the plains.

He married a Cheyenne Indian woman and when she died, he married her sister. His influence over all the tribes grew and grew. "His integrity, his truthfulness on all occasions and his remarkable courage endeared him to the red and white man alike, and Fort William prospered wonderfully under his careful and just management," says one historian who knew him.

In 1852 the War department tried to buy the fort. Finally, tired of their haggling ways Bent set fire to the fort and the gunpowder which he left in it blew it up. Then he moved farther down the Arkansas to Big Timbers and there built a stone fort in which he continued his trading operations until 1859 when he sold it to the government, who changed its name to Fort Wise and later to Fort Lyon. Bent died on the ranch of his son-in-law near the present city of Las Animas May 19, 1869, and lies buried in the country where his fort made his name famous throughout the West.

Planning Another Stratosphere Flight

Army Day at San Francisco Will Draw Many Motorists

Preparations for handling a huge throng of motoring spectators at the Army Day celebration on Saturday afternoon, April 7, at the Presidio in San Francisco are being made by the military authorities, reports the touring bureau of the California State Automobile Association. Parking facilities for 50,000 persons and their cars are being arranged at Crissy Field. Army Day is sponsored by the San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce. Featuring the program will be a spectacular sham battle, commencing at 2:30 P. M., preceded by a review at 1:30 P. M.

Taking part in the battle, technically described as an "attack demonstration," will be the Thirtieth Infantry, Sixth Coast Artillery, Seventy-sixth Field Artillery, and army planes from Crissy and March Fields.

The Seventy-sixth Field Artillery, one of the few remaining horse-drawn units, will set out from the Presidio at Monterey this week and require about four days for the trip to San Francisco under forced march conditions. It is expected the unit will soon be motorized and that this will be its last march behind horses. The sham battle may also be the last opportunity to see army horses in action.

MINING NOTES

An airplane search for gold in the Quiet Lake region of the Canadian Yukon will be resumed by Lynn Staples, member of a socially prominent Racine family. His Fox Moth plane will be equipped with skis for winter and pontoons for summer.

The comparatively minor increase in the value of gold and silver exports from Alaska in 1933, amounting to $570,274 above the 1932 total, is but a hint of what may be expected from the Northern territory this year.

Oscar V. Dahl, owner of 900 acres of placer ground in the Moose Pass district, formerly known as the Wilson property, announces that conditions are shaping up for a very busy season, says the Seward Gateway. Dahl is laying plans for early return to his camp to put finishing touches to pre-season work.

Mines in the Barkerville area of Cariboo district, particularly in Cariboo Gold Quartz, as given world-wide publicity by the New York Times, which carried in a recent Sunday edition not only a full page story of the new conditions in that country, but a page of rotogravure illustrations.

The usual 3 per cent dividend will be paid by the Premier Gold Mining Company for the first quarter of 1934, says the Alaska Weekly. Payment will be made on April 16 to the shareholders of record on March 16. The announcement set at rest rumors to the effect that the company would declare a dividend of double the usual amount. The payment will bring the total of dividends paid from operation of the famous Premier mine to $16,699,603.

Directors of U. S. Smelting and Refining Company have declared an extra dividend of $1 and the regular quarterly dividend of 25 cents a share on the common stock.

Congress continues to amuse itself with silver while the administration pats the silverites on the back and promises to "do something for silver" while deftly preventing the passage of any silver legislation of any consequence, says the Alaska Weekly.

The Alaska Juneau Gold Mining Company has declared an extra dividend of 15 cents a share, in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 15 cents, both payable on May 1 to stockholders of record April 10.

When the Monument Creek Mining Company paid its sixth dividend last month, stockholders received 1,180 per cent of their original investment.

LAKE COUNTY REDBUD TOUR SCHEDULED FOR SUNDAY

Residents and officials of Lake County have issued a general invitation to motorists to join in a tour around the shores of Clear Lake next Sunday afternoon (April 1) to celebrate the blossoming of the redbuds and to enjoy the vivid display of color.

Roads around the lake are in attractive condition for the occasion, reports the Touring Bureau of the California State Automobile Association. The tour will start at noon at Kelseyville and proceed through Findley, Lakeport, Upper Lake, Nice, Lucerne, Clear Lake Oaks, Clear Lake Park, Clear Lake Highlands, Lower Lake, and Middletown. Participants may join at any convenient point.

A hick town is a place where you get as many gallons as you pay for.

Feather River Route Boosters Plan Rally

Completion of the Feather River highway at the earliest possible date will be the keynote of a gathering of officials and civic leaders at Oroville on April 27. In attendance will be delegations from various parts of the Feather river region and the adjoining northern Sacramento Valley and northern Sierra county. Work on the project has been under way for six years and approximately $4,000,000 has been expended on a highway destined to be on of the most important interstate routes in California.

The gathering will formulate plans to secure allocation of further available funds to expedite completion of the highway.

The current state highway budget provided $670,000 for grading operations on the Feather river highway project in Butte County and $590,000 for similar wark in Plumas County, but considerable work will still remain when these funds have been expended.

Nevada will also be represented at the meeting, as completion of the Feather River highway will provide that state with another connecting route into California. Completion of the highway will also mark the honoring by California of a compact made with Nevada more than a decade ago. Under an agreement made during the term of Governor Stevens, Nevada built a highway from Reno to Purdy on the state line eleven years ago, and has since been waiting for California to build the connecting Feather River highway.

At the Western States Highway Conference in Reno last December, held at the instance of the California State Automobile Association, a resolution was unanimously adopted calling upon California to allot all available funds toward completion of this highway.

The Feather River highway will consist of a new road from Oroville to Quincy, along the north fork of the Feather river, and improvement of existing roads through Beskwith Pass to the Nevada line. The route is through one of the most scenic sections of the state. The altitude at Beckwith Pass, 5,220 feet, is the lowest of any path in the Sierra.

MOTORIST MUST KEEP WINDSHIELD CLEAN

E. Raymond Cato, Chief of the California Highway Patrol, has directed officers of the patrol to stop motor vehicles with windshields no longer transparent because the inner layer of binding material has slipped or cracked sufficiently to create a traffic menace.

Drivers of such cars will be required to equip their vehicles with new windshields or show cause why they should not be compelled to do so.

Drivers of cars who sit behind windshields so obscured that the roadway can be seen only with difficulty are operating their vehicles in violation of the California Vehicle Act, he pointed out. This section of the law provides that all motor vehicles shall be in such condition at all times that "its operation on the highway shall not endager the life of the driver or the lives of occupants of the vehicle or other persons upon the highway."

SIDELIGHTS

Statistics are often valuable, but sometimes come high. When a Senator asked the Tariff Commission how many tons of fish were brought into the United States by aliens, inquiry had to be made to some 56,000 owners of fishing vessels before the weighty question could be answered. The answer cost the country's taxpayers about $19,000.

We newspaper guys will agree with Oscar Webber, manager of one of Detroit's largest stores, who told a merchants' convention: "When the going is tough our experience shows that nothing sells goods like newspaper advertising."

Dorothy Dell of New York is a little show girl who is closely chaperoned by her mother, in order that she may not fall under the demoralizing influences which sometimes beset young women of the stage. Incidentally, Miss Dell's most striking song hit contained the line: "Was I drunk; was he handsome; did my mother give me hell?"

An odd case of versatility is that of Robert Cloud, a New York negro, who is a lyric composer of talent, with more than a score of songs to his credit, for which he has written both words and music. His regular job, however, is that of "red cap" at the Grand Central Station.

People eat 20 per cent less bread per capita than they did 30 years ago, according to the Department of Agriculture. If bread consumption had kept pace with the increase in population there would be no wheat surplus today. Perhaps modern dieting fads are responsible for the low price of wheat.

King he say nothing doing and Mr. Washington tell Admiral Dewie to shoot big guns at him. By and by king say he will not run over American persons again. 'Let George do it,' he say, and so today American persons she is free."

Temperance, not teetoalism, is the motto of Captain Boney Ridley, 80-year-old North Carolina mountaineer, according to a news dispatch which quotes him thus: "It is true that in my youth I would drink a bit, but for the last fifteen years I have been tapering down until now I notice that if I drink a pint of whiskey at one time it has a tendency to go to my head."

A nervous correspondent demands that stamp-moistening devices be installed in all postoffices, to eliminate the "insanitary and dangerous" habit of licking postage stamps with the tongue. He fails to give a list of fatalities resulting from stamp-licking, however.

Fulton, Miss., is not exactly a "twin city," but it claims the record for pairs of twins in a town of 900 population. Among its prominent twins are the sheriff, deputy sheriff, the wife of the chancery clerk, and the power company's ofice manager. Parents of twins include the lady postmaster, three merchants, and the sheriff's brother. One of the town's truck drivers is a twin and another has twin nieces. All these twins except two live within one mile of the Fulton courthouse.

No one has yet taken the trouble to count the number of parasites on the public payrolls.

Our ape-like attitude with respect to fashions might be used as a strong argument for evolution.

NATION IS DEDICATED TO PUBLIC EDUCATION

More, not less. intelligence of its citizens is needed to solve the economic, political and social problems of the United States; the education of all citizens, in rural as well as in urban districts, so they can cope wisely with the vital problems facing the country, is the goal of Americanism.

This statement was made by R. W. Blackburn, president of the California Farm Federation, in issuing an official proclamation to the 23,000 members of his organization in support of Public Schools Week, April 23-29. The observance of Public Schools Week, he said, is a fitting manner "in which to dedicate publicly the paramount importance of public education as the key to perpetuation of American democracy, American ideals, and American liberty."

"The safety of America," he declared, "in the hands of the next generation is entrusted to the work of our public schools, building and moulding future American citizens, without discrimination as to race, color, and creed, without bias as to social position, and giving the same opportunity for acquisition of learning, culture and training to all, from the most sparsely settled districts of our rural communities to the most congested neighborhoods of our urban centers.

The short tempered golfer had spent a half an hour unsuccessfully searching for a lost ball, when an elderly lady seated on the links called out to him: "Excuse me, sir, but shall I be breaking the rules if I tell you where it is?"
